eth lodge, New Jersey. Quoting a poetical selection to show that the succoring of the needy and the protecting of the poor was the principal idea of the fraternal orders, the speaker referred to the antiquity this idea of fraternal help, as it ald be seen in the guilds of the enteenth century. Love and the could be seen in the given and the seventeenth century. Love and the charms of friendship have sought our brothers, and the exemplification of those virtues which are shown in the those virtues which are shown in the law shall be lived up todge must certainly have a ten benefit mankind and show offuence in the community. To show he virtues which we have upon our anners must surely result in the milding up of character and men of good citizenship, and we shall so live that the future shall carry on the high objects before us.

high objects before us.

The Benevolent Protective Order of Elks was founded in 1867-68 by a few of those connected with the theatrical profession, having for its cardinal principles, virtue, charity, brotherly love and fidelity. It has no more beautiful service nor more graceful tribtiful service nor more graceful trib-ute than this memorial service, which brings to us the thoughts of our brothers who have passed away. Charbrothers who have passed away. Charity is of many kinds and means a great deal, but it is in these societies that it abounds largely. It means the kindly handelasp, the considerate thought, the forgetfulness of those things which are better not remembered. Brotherly love makes us all akin, and means to assist everyone as though he were my brother. This, too, is a virtue practiced by the Elks. track.

Convened for their annual lodge of sorrow, Norwich lodge of Elks, No. 430, on Sunday afternoon in Broadway theater, solemnly recalled the names of their departed members and honored their memory, with the impressive service that was conducted. The members of the lodge, who met at their rooms at 3 o'clock and marched from their rooms to the theater, were seated upon the stage; and the entire seating capacity of the theater, was occupied with their friends who had been favored with the special tickets of admission.

While the audience was assembling, the Elks' orchestra, directed by Broliving programme:
